It's your Water Too - Consultation on Southern Water's next business plan Email dated 16th February 2018, from Joel Hufford, Southern Water Good morning, We're getting ready to submit our business plan to Ofwat. This detailed document is vital to determining the quality of water and wastewater services in the South East of England over the next five years and beyond. The business plan sets out how much we propose to spend up to 2025 on nearly all aspects of our business, from cutting sewer leaks to coping with many more people and much less water. Of course, how much we spend directly affects how much our customers' bills will be. We've been talking to people throughout the South East, from bill-paying homeowners to income-generating visitors, from investing businesses to environmental champions, and from vulnerable consumers to users of the future. We've spoken to 500,000 people so far, but to prepare the best plan with the lowest bills and the most resilient water supply we can manage, we really need your input. It's Your Water Too We've published a new document called It's Your Water Too. This has the five basic things we promise to get right day in and day out, as well as the five goals to transform how we work over the long-term. You have helped us shape these - now we'd like you to help us turn these into specific actions. We want to know how we can keep working with you and your organisation throughout the next five years and beyond. There are loads of ways you can get involved in this discussion, including specific events in your area. These are open, lively and thought-provoking conversations – we don't just want you to fill in a form. You can find out about those events and the other ways to get involved here. Why wouldn't you? It's your water too, after all. Have your say	For information
